1 You are going to read an interview with Fahd, who studied at the University of Auckland in New Zealand on the King Abdullah Scholarship Programme. First, read the questions and predict the answers to questions 1 and 2.

1 What was the greatest challenge you had to overcome?

2 Why should students study abroad?

3 Was the style of teaching different?

4 How was your accommodation?

5 What was your favourite attraction in Auckland?

6 What is your best memory of New Zealand?

2 Now read the interview and match the questions with the paragraphs.

A

The experiences gained during an extended time abroad are absolutely invaluable. Now that I have spent a semester away from my home country, I am more aware of the huge variety of cultures around the world. I am also more aware of the similarities amongst people. With Auckland being such an international centre, I especially enjoyed the excitement of sharing laughter and making memories with new friends from around the world.

B

I chose to do a homestay. I would definitely recommend the homestay experience if you are looking for a taste of the real New Zealand lifestyle. I suppose I would have met more of my fellow students more quickly if I'd stayed in a hall of residence, but the overall experience was entirely worthwhile.

C

Mount Eden was fantastic for a great view of the city and an exhilarating walk to the top of its crater. I also enjoyed being able to jog along the northern edge of the city towards Mission Bay. Though Mission Bay itself was just beyond a comfortable jogging distance, I could spend about NZ$1.60 and get there in five minutes on the bus.

D

I thought that the style of teaching for each of my classes was a nice contrast to what I've experienced in Saudi Arabia. For each major lecture, there would be a professor brought in who specialised in that field. In my Biopsychology course, we had three different professors, each with a different specialty. Lectures were also more interactive as we were encouraged to take part and be a part of the lecture instead of just listening to somebody talking.

E

I always enjoyed the spontaneity of my life in Auckland. One week near the end of my stay, a friend and I decided that we should visit Australia while we were still so near (1,000 miles versus 8,000!). Four days before departing for Sydney and Tasmania, we began our preparations, purchased our flights and booked our hostels. We had a complete blast and I definitely learned to enjoy planning on the spur of the moment! It was a time that I think will always really stand out in my mind as very special.

F

It was a bit difficult to initiate conversation with the locals at the university to begin with. But I found that once I attended several on-campus activities, this challenge became less of a concern. I decided to become a member of a sailing club. The friends that I met through the club proved to be of great assistance during my adjustment to living abroad, and we are still in contact today.

3 Are these sentences true (T) or false (F)?

The image shows a screenshot of an email client window. At the top is a toolbar with icons and labels: 'Get Mail', 'Write', 'Contacts', 'Reply', 'Forward', 'Delete', and 'Print'. Below the toolbar, the email header shows 'From: Leo' and 'Subject: Hi'. The main body of the email contains three paragraphs of text. The first paragraph says 'Hi!' and 'I hope everything's OK. It seems a long time since I heard from you. What have you and your family been doing recently?'. The second paragraph says 'I'm trying to decide which universities to apply for. My main decision is about whether to study abroad or not. I've looked at some universities in Australia, and I'd love to go there to study. There are some excellent courses and I could spend my free time doing water sports, which I love, as you know!'. The third paragraph says 'I'm also considering coming to study in your country. What do you think are the advantages for me of doing that? On the other hand, I can see that staying in England is easier. Maybe you could come and study here, or perhaps you'd like to go to Australia too! What are your preferences?'. Below the text, it says 'This week I've been doing work experience. My school organised some work for me in a fashion designer's studio! It was fantastic. He was really nice and I learned tons about fashion and making clothes. What kind of preparation for leaving school do you get? Write and tell me about it – I'd really like to know.' and 'Write soon! All best wishes, Leo'. In the bottom right corner of the email content area, there is a small, tilted photograph of a young man wearing a keffiyeh and a dark jacket, looking down at something in his hands.

1 Before you read, look at the photos and make notes on the following:

- 1 the conditions the people are working in
- 2 how you think the workers might feel
- 3 what aspects of each job make it dangerous

Oil driller Drillers can take home between 130,000 SAR and 170,000 SAR on average annually. Drilling is dangerous because of gas leaks that can lead to explosions. An average oil driller works 12 hours a day with only a handful of breaks.

King-crab fisherman

A crew member's annual salary averages 150,000–187,000 SAR, depending on how successful the season is. The dangers they face are fairly obvious: working with difficult-to-manage equipment in an extremely harsh environment, surrounded by freezing sea waters.

America's Toughest Jobs is a reality television show that was broadcast on American television. Thirteen contestants competed to win the prize which was the sum of all the salaries that employees would earn in the first year of doing these jobs.

In each episode, the contestants left their safe and comfortable careers to attempt some of the most challenging and dangerous jobs on earth. They were supervised and evaluated by actual workers or employers in those jobs. The supervisors selected the best-performing contestants for praise, and also judged which contestants performed the worst. One of the worst had to leave each week's show.

The series showed the contestants suffering sea-sickness on board ship in the Bering sea, narrowly avoiding falling tree trunks, performing mountain rescues and connecting oil pipes in 43°C heat. They also had to do maintenance work on a bridge 60 metres above a harbour, perform jumps in a monster truck, stand in an icy river all day, search for gold and drive a truck across frozen Alaska.

Ice road trucker Ice roads are created when snow is cleared from frozen lakes. Truckers can't drive faster than 15 mph, in order to prevent waves from occurring under the ice's surface. One of the greatest hazards for a trucker is when ice contracts and expands, causing it to crack. A trucker can make around 2,800 SAR a load.

Logger Loggers earn an average salary of 165,000 SAR. It's not only the danger posed by falling trees that makes logging so hazardous: the cutting machinery and other equipment make it an extremely dangerous occupation.

Gold miner A gold miner can get 7,500–15,000 SAR per ounce of gold. Gold miners in Alaska live and work in the mountains, standing in icy cold rivers, sometimes working 24 hours a day.

Bridge crew worker A bridge crew member requires most of the same skills as any other construction job. The workers are at risk of being injured in accidents and falling from dangerous heights. A typical salary is 170,000 SAR.

Mountain rescuer Freezing temperatures and high altitude make this a particularly dangerous job. Other major risks are avalanches and falls. Hurricane-force winds add to the danger. Salaries start at around 190,000 SAR.

Reading

1 Read the text about shop work for teenagers in the UK and complete the sentences below with between one and three words.

Shop work for teenagers

The best way for you, a teenager, to find work in a retail store is to identify the type of store you'd like to work in and simply pay a visit to the store and ask the manager whether he or she has any part-time vacancies. If you have special interests or hobbies you could work in a store which matches your interest, like a book shop, cycle store or clothing store. Of course you could also look for something near your house like a local supermarket or newsagents. You can find job advertisements in your local newspaper, but most teenagers get their first job by just asking what's available.

Most shop jobs will be in sales and, although you'll be expected to have a decent standard of education, all tills are computerised these days so you don't have to be a genius at maths. In fact, nearly all store managers will be more concerned that you are pleasant to other people, you possess good communication skills and you're confident. You may find shop work, in supermarkets for example, where you have to re-fill shelves, or other roles that don't involve dealing with customers, but the vast majority of jobs in retail for teenagers will be in sales, where you're out on the shop floor.

In addition to receiving a wage, many companies also offer staff discounts on items bought within their stores or other rewards, which can be a real plus if you're able to find work in a store which is also related to your hobbies and interests.

The legal age at which you can work in a store in the UK is 14 but there are lots of laws with regard to work and teenagers between the ages of 13 and 18, so make sure you understand what you can and cannot do as well as having some knowledge about your rights.

- Teenagers are advised to go and ask the manager of the store they want to work in whether there are any at their store.
- A cycle store is an example of a store which might match your

1 Before you read the text about the International Space Station, write notes about what you already know.

- 1 what it is and where it is
- 2 how you think it got into space
.....
- 3 what you think will happen to it eventually
.....

2 Read the text. Choose from sentences a–f the one that fits the gap. There is one extra sentence which you do not need to use.

- a The 'ISS End-of-Life Disposal Plan' was prepared by Michael Suffredini, NASA's manager for the ISS program.
- b Jones also says that NASA is well aware of the space station's weakest and strongest features after its long years in service.
- c In February, NASA's shuttle Endeavour delivered a new set of windows to the ISS during the STS-130 shuttle mission.
- d ISS will be in operation until at least 2020, but eventually it will have to be decommissioned without adding to the amount of space junk already in orbit around the Earth.
- e For former shuttle astronaut and space station visitor Tom Jones, the end of the ISS is a valuable opportunity.
- f In November 2010, the second decade of human occupation of the International Space Station (ISS) station began, setting a record for being the longest continuously-inhabited spacecraft.

3 Look at 2 again. Underline the words in the text which helped you match the missing sentences.

- 2 modules (paragraph 1)
- 3 de-orbit (paragraph 3)
- 4 a watery grave (paragraph 3)
- 5 deep space (paragraph 4)
- 6 stepping stone (paragraph 4)

5 Consider the following arguments and write your opinion below.

How do you dispose of a space station?

(1) About 15 nations have contributed funding, personnel, knowledge, modules and other hardware, with 200 astronauts and space tourists visiting the station over that time.

(2) NASA planners are looking into how to bring down the space station and drop it into remote ocean waters with the least damage to the environment. Meanwhile, other experts are arguing that pieces of the station's hardware should be recycled for other duties in space.

(3) According to this document, NASA (the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the U.S. space agency) has had discussions with the European Space Agency and the Russian Space Program about a de-orbit craft for use to help drive the space station into its ultimate watery grave.

(4) He is excited about the possibility of re-using parts of the space station in future space missions, such as the plan to travel to an asteroid. He believes that the space station could be used as a 'knowledge stepping stone' to lead us towards the goal of exploring deep space. 'I know NASA's plans to send its explorers into deep space include power systems, living areas, life support systems, laboratories and so on. I think NASA is wise to look into how practical it might be to choose still valuable ISS components and either build them into a deep-space vehicle, or even move some of the station to a place where it becomes even more useful to future exploration efforts,' Jones said.

(5) 'After another 10 or more years, the station partners will have a very good idea what parts have a lot more life and usefulness left, or could live on as part of a new vehicle,' Jones said. 'I think our station partners will do the smartest thing, which is to make the fullest use of the ISS in its present or future form.'

Is the International Space Station a waste of money?
Yes ...

The little useful science it has provided could have been discovered more cheaply using robot (unmanned) spacecraft.

It has given science a bad name by involving commercial elements such as space tourism.

Low-earth orbit is less exciting than the exploration of the Moon and planets.

No ...

It formed a bond of scientific collaboration between nearly 20 nations involved in the space station.

It is a brilliant scientific and technological achievement that will be useful for further space missions.

It caused technological advancements such as medical imaging, which produces pictures of the inside of bodies. Medical imaging was developed from NASA's use of signal processing to provide clearer imaging from the space station.

I think that the ISS (is/is not) a waste of money. The main reason I think this is ...

Sky show

This week, despite the bitter cold, many of us have gone out into our gardens thinking we (1) were to see amazing events in the sky above us. Astronomers had told us that we (2) see a solar eclipse on Monday. But in my part of the country, it was too cloudy to see the sun with or without an eclipse. On Tuesday, my plan was that I was (3) to look for Venus, Uranus and Jupiter, all of which are closer to us than usual. Unfortunately, just as I was (4) to go outside to search the sky for these planets, it began to snow, so once again we couldn't witness anything but the reality of life on earth. Yesterday, I tried again. The astronomers promised there (5) to be a meteor shower and the weather forecasters promised that we (6) have clear skies. They were both right and I don't know which event was more exciting: having clear skies here or the spectacular meteor shower!

Do you think such missions are a good idea? Give your reasons. Why do you think people have volunteered to go on such a mission?

NASA is actively investigating the possibility of humans colonising other worlds in one-way missions.

One-way missions bring planet colonisation within technological and financial possibility.

Mars is the most likely planet to have substantial quantities of water.

Astronauts would be sent supplies from Earth but they would become self-sufficient as soon as possible.

Such a mission would require not only major international cooperation, but a return to the spirit of exploration and risk-taking ethos of Columbus and Ibn Battuta.

A story

1 Read this task. Write some ideas for your story.

- 1 You have decided to enter a short-story competition in an international magazine. The story must end with the following words:

Ayman walked out onto the launch pad towards the spacecraft, taking some last deep breaths of earth's atmosphere. He turned, waved at the crowd then climbed aboard. His lifetime's dream was about to come true.

- 2 Ask yourself questions about the ending. For example:
- Who is Ayman?
 - Why is he doing this?
 - Where is he going?
 - Is he going to return?
 - Is he happy about going?
 - When and where is this happening?
 - How did he get to this point?

2 Write some ideas for the beginning and the middle of the story.

Beginning: Short section, introducing settings and characters and an 'explosive' or life-changing incident which starts the action of the story.

Middle: The longest section, where characters respond to the incident and start trying to solve the problems that it has created.

End: High point of the story where everything is resolved.

Ayman on launch pad, waving, dream coming true

3 Now write your story using your notes.

1 Look at the cartoon. Imagine this was your child. How do you think you would feel? Why?

- proud?
- worried?
- amused?
- something else?

2 Why might the following happen to child geniuses when they grow up? Why?

- 1 They find it hard to fit in socially.
- 2 They have problems finding a job.
- 3 They stop doing the thing that they did so well when they were children.

Jeremy Roberts

At three he was so brainy that staff at his nursery asked him to help when their computer went wrong! Jeremy, from Watford, said: 'I can remember one of the staff who was new looking for a member of staff called Jeremy to help sort out a problem with their computer and then she realised it was me.' He attended ordinary state schools and became increasingly frustrated. 'I used to get so bored because I was ahead of everyone,' said Jeremy. But when he went abroad at the age of 17 to study for an International Baccalaureate he was inspired and ended up with one of the best marks possible. Now he's studying Legal Studies at a study centre in Florida. 'I'm happy with how my life's turned out,' says Jeremy.

Adam Dent

At 14 Adam was studying chemistry at Oxford but a year later he left. He did an Open University degree while stacking shelves in a supermarket and then went back to Oxford and graduated with a first class honours degree in chemistry in 2002. Adam, from Aylesbury, Bucks, now an IT consultant, said, 'Being a child genius is a double-edged sword. It can be as much a curse as a gift.'

Ganesh Sittampalam

Ganesh Sittampalam graduated from Oxford University with a first in maths when he was 16. On hearing about his degree, he said: 'I yelled "Yippee!" I'm quite proud. I'm happy because I've done it, not because of my age. I'd have felt the same if I was 20.' By his 20s, he had a masters in computing and a doctorate in Intentional Programming. Now 30, he's an associate at Credit Suisse and lives in Oxford with his wife and son.

Malek Fakhouri

He has been interested in language since he was very young, and was completing difficult word puzzles at an age when most children haven't even learnt to read. By the time he was nine, he had won the national junior crossword championship twice, and six years later he started a degree in modern languages. He now speaks or writes six languages apart from his native Arabic and is Professor of Linguistics at his country's most important university. As a hobby, he invents famously difficult word puzzles for newspapers and websites.

Ruth Lawrence

Ruth got a first in maths from Oxford when she was 13. Ruth moved abroad in 1998. She now works at a university and is married with two children and says she is determined to allow them to 'develop in a natural way'.

3 Read about some child geniuses, then fill in the table.

Name	Area of genius	Present situation
Jeremy Roberts	IT/computers	Legal Studies student in Florida

4 Look at the quotations from the text. Write in your own words what you think each one means. Use your dictionary.

- 1 'I used to get so bored because I was ahead of everyone.'
He got fed up because everyone else was slower than he was.
- 2 'I'm happy with how my life's turned out.'
- 3 'Being a child genius is a double-edged sword. It can be as much a curse as a gift.'
- 4 'I yelled "Yippee!" I'm quite proud. I'm happy because I've done it, not because of my age. I'd have felt the same if I was 20.'
- 5 'develop in a natural way'

5 Write notes about what you think.

What advantages and disadvantages do child geniuses have while growing up? Overall, do you think it's a 'curse' or a 'gift'?

Paragraph 3: what makes his life unusual and not unusual

2 Look at Picture 1 and read the newspaper article below about the boy.

Literary genius Kevin Fairley, aged 9, has attracted media attention around the world after his first collection of poetry was published last week by a major international publishing company. Kevin and his family, from Manchester, have appeared on international news channels, in most of the UK's newspapers and on several TV shows.

At his book launch in London, Kevin told me he was quite pleased with all the attention, but was keen to point out that he is really just an ordinary boy who goes to school, has lots of friends and enjoys playing football. 'When they meet me, some people expect me to be a bit strange,' he explained, 'and they're surprised to find I'm quite normal.'

Kevin's parents have tried hard to make sure Kevin has a normal life ever since discovering that he was a brilliant poet and writer. 'Growing up as a gifted child can be difficult,' says his father, a lecturer in Literature, 'so we want to make sure he keeps his feet on the ground.' He adds that his professional interest in literature had nothing to do with Kevin's talent. 'It was clear from a very early age that he loved words, stories and poems. He definitely didn't need anyone to push him into it.'

Clever creatures!

Animal communication has been a subject of great fascination to experts and non-experts alike. Obviously most (perhaps even all) animals have ways of passing information to one another, but there are doubts about whether even the most complicated systems, such as those used by dolphins and chimpanzees, can really be called languages.

Recently, the work of psychologist Klaus Zuberbühler has given us a new insight into the way monkeys communicate. While working in the rainforests of West Africa, he and his team recorded the sounds made by a very small Diana monkey while it was attacking an eagle. They thought they recognised the noises, but when they analysed the recording, they realised that this was a different call from normal, one that was only heard when the monkeys were attacking eagles.

Rainforests are full of monkey shouts and screams, but the importance of this discovery is that this is a different sound from the normal signals for raising alarm or defending territory, and something much more interesting. It was passing on complicated information about a specific danger and its location. As the team continued recording and studying monkey calls over the next few months, they gradually began to form an idea of what information the communication system was conveying, and how it worked.

They decided that some species of monkeys were able to add suffixes to their calls in order to vary the meaning and be more specific. For example, when they were repeating calls from other monkeys, they would add an extra "oo" sound to the call normally used for warning of approaching leopards; similarly, an extra long "ooo" could be added to a normal cry to indicate a falling tree or branch.

Zuberbühler eventually concluded that there were six basic types of call, and three of these sometimes had suffixes added, creating a complex communication system that is capable of being combined in various ways to express a large number of meanings. The most interesting discovery, though, was that the meanings weren't understood by just one species, even just by other types of monkey, but also by other animals in the rainforest, including birds like the hornbill. What this seems to demonstrate is that we are talking about a system that communicates meaning between species.

Microfinance

The majority of the world's population is poor, living on $2–3 US per day. Over 500 million of these people are involved in business. They are self-employed or work in microenterprises, small businesses which employ up to five people. Microentrepreneurs make a wide range of goods such as pots, pans and furniture in small workshops or they take part in small trading activities such as selling food or repairing cars. Yet they are often unable to develop their businesses because they do not have access to financial services such as loans or a safe place to keep savings, such as a bank account. Over 80% of all households in developing countries do not have access to banking services.

Microfinance is a growing industry providing financial services. Until recently, it focused on providing 'microcredit' (small loans of about $50–500) for microenterprises. Now, however, it is recognised that poor people need a variety of financial services, not just credit. Microfinance organisations have therefore started to provide a wider range of financial services, including savings accounts and insurance to low-income enterprises and households.

Most microfinance initiatives were started by not-for-profit 'non-governmental organisations' (NGOs). These often developed into formal microfinance institutions (MFIs) which are regulated by the relevant national banking or microfinance authorities. An increasing number of local MFIs have become for-profit organisations. For-profit MFIs may be non-bank financial institutions, such as companies which are set up to offer credit or loans only, specialist commercial microfinance banks, or microfinance departments of larger commercial banks. In addition to insurance and money transfer services, some MFIs have also begun providing social services, such as basic healthcare and education for their customers and their families.

One of the most important advantages of credit is that it enables the poor to expand their sources of income. Most poor households are involved in a variety of activities, depending on the season, prices, their health and other factors. This may include growing their own food, working for others, running small businesses and accessing loans.

Kamal Rani is an excellent example of this. He has taken loans three times. He invested his first small loan in his brother's bamboo business. Kamal also works making bamboo mats. He used his second loan to make large containers for storing crops and other products, which he sells from home to wholesalers and villagers. Next he borrowed another 4,000 taka, the local currency, to buy a cow. He can repay his loan from his profits from selling milk and from his investment in his brother's business. He still makes bamboo products, which he will sell at the end of the year, when the price of the mats goes up. He can take advantage of this increase in the price of the mats because he has other sources of income to make his weekly loan instalment payments. Like other low-income clients, Kamal Rani's diversified activities enable him to maximise returns from investment.

- 5 Read about the man in the photo. Would you give money to a microfinance organisation so that he could have a loan? Why/Why not? How much would you give? Write your reasons in the space below.

Eugene Brown

Eugene is 43 and has four children. He has been trading in goods for many years and now sells fruit and vegetables. He would like a loan to help him widen the range of products he sells to include items such as cooking gas. This would also help him with household expenses, such as food and education.

Simon had a bad morning before school yesterday. Everything went wrong. First of all, he forgot to set his alarm clock so he woke up late. Then he rushed into the kitchen to make some breakfast. He put an egg in a saucepan and it started to cook. Then he went to get his school bag ready. When he came back, the egg was burnt. He threw it away and just had some coffee and toast. Then he went to get his coat. He put it on and realised that it was still wet from the day before. He looked at his watch. Oh no! It had stopped. It needed a new battery. He looked at the kitchen clock and saw that he had to leave in five minutes. So he switched on the TV and there was a funny programme on. He watched it and then he was late for the bus. He started to run but tripped over because he hadn't remembered to tie his shoelaces. He missed the bus.

2 Read the text and find the bad effects of a lack of sleep for each age group.

How much sleep do we need?

Research can't say exactly how much sleep we need, but experts agree that we need different amounts at different ages. The following description of a family shows the typical effects when different age groups do not get enough sleep.

The teenage son is lively in the evenings, chatting with his family during dinner, talking on the phone with friends, playing on his computer and watching TV. When it's time to go to bed, he doesn't feel tired. But when his alarm goes off at 6.30 am, he is not fun to be around. He goes to school feeling irritable, tired and unhappy and often has difficulty staying awake in his classes. His biology and age play a large role in his sleep habits. As a teenager, his body is programmed to stay up later in the evening and to wake later in the morning. As a result, a 10 o'clock bedtime feels too early, and a 6.30 wake-up time doesn't fit his current sleep needs. But the biggest problem is that adolescents still need lots of sleep – at least eight and a half hours every night – and it's hard to get enough when your body says 'stay up late' and school says 'start early'.

The four-year-old daughter needs more sleep than adolescents or adults to be well rested. She often stays up with her family and doesn't usually take naps – in fact, if she falls asleep in the car, it's because it's past her bedtime or it's the day after getting too little sleep at night. The lack of sleep affects her behaviour badly: she starts to whine and sometimes has tantrums.

The mother's sleeping habits have changed a lot throughout her life as a mother. She is used to losing sleep to look after the needs of her family. She has a busy day at work and at home. By the end of the day she feels exhausted, but hasn't had time to herself and doesn't want to sleep.

The father often spends early mornings and late nights working. When he's not working he's thinking about work problems, and this leads to many nights of sleeplessness. This affects his daily life. He can't enjoy time with his family and doesn't exercise as he used to. The less he sleeps, the more likely he is to want food. Research has found links between appetite increase and lack of sleep due to hormones that are produced when you're short on sleep.

The grandfather spends very little time in deep sleep and is more easily woken, although his average total sleep time has increased slightly since the age of 65. Like many adults of this age, he divides his sleep between afternoon naps and night-time sleep. Taking naps, though, may decrease the need to sleep at night and some older people complain of difficulty falling asleep or staying asleep. Lack of exercise may also affect their ability to sleep.

3 Find the meanings of the underlined words from the text in your dictionary. Write the words in the correct gap.

- 1 How and when you grow is controlled by chemicals in your body called
- 2 Some children have when they don't get what they want.
- 3 People often feel when they are tired or stressed.
- 4 Most still live at home with their parents.
- 5 Drinking a lot of coffee or stress can lead to
- 6 Young children often when they are ill or tired.

- 5 should have more sleep than any of the other family members.
- 6 can't sleep because of worrying at night.
- 7 is very tired but wants to stay awake at bedtime.
- 8 sleeps longer now than previously.
- 9 finds it hard to be with the family.

5 Have you or anyone you know ever suffered from sleeplessness? Write about when this happened and what the effects were.

I couldn't sleep at night when I was excited about a holiday. I didn't want to eat breakfast the next day and I fell asleep when I was watching TV.

This image shows a single sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and run across the width of the page. There are approximately 20 lines visible. The paper appears to be from a notebook or a set of legal pads. The edges of the paper are slightly irregular, suggesting it might be part of a bound volume. The lighting is even, and there are no markings or text on the page.

Reading

1 Read the text about opening a bank account, and choose a, b or c.

More and more young people aged 11–18 are opening a bank account. It seems that there is a growing need, driven particularly by Internet shopping, for under-18s to have access to a bank account that provides a plastic payment card.

Banks realised long ago that it is important to catch their customers early. Once a customer becomes familiar with a bank and has maybe a savings account and a current account, plus a handful of monthly automatic payments for power, water, house rent and so on, it becomes awkward and time-consuming to change to a different bank. Statistics show that very few adults choose to change their bank when they have been with one for a few years.

It is possible for children younger than 11 to have a bank account in their name, with a bank book that is supervised by their parents, but to young people aged 11 and over, some banks offer a simple current account with a card which can be used to pay for things in shops and online. The card can also be used to withdraw cash. Many of these accounts can be managed online. Getting into debt is not allowed so overdrafts and loans are not offered until a customer reaches 18. Each time the card is used, the account is checked to make sure there is enough money in the account.

Hassan, 16 years old, who has had a Firstline Bank Account since he was 14, summarises the benefits of having a young person's account. 'My mum got tired of me asking to use her card,' she says. 'I had pocket money, but I couldn't use it online to download games. Having my own card is a lot better than having to carry around a load of cash, and if I lost it, I'd just cancel it and I'd still have my money.' There are other benefits, too. Zaki, 15, says, 'I opened one at first because I saw an advert on TV for Delta Bank. They were offering all these free gifts if you opened an account that month, so I did! I got some vouchers for a sports shop, and bought some trainers I'd wanted for ages!'

This may seem a rather light-hearted approach to opening an account, but as the youth bank account market gets more competitive, banks spend increasingly large amounts on offers to get their young customers' attention. As a result, now is a great time to open an account if you are between 11 and 18, especially if you spend some time searching for the best deal.

| <ol style="list-style-type: none">1 The first paragraph refers to an increase in a the places that accept a young person's bank card.
b the number of banks that offer young people bank cards.
c the reasons for under-18s to want a bank card.2 What point is made in paragraph 2?
a Banks try many ways to keep their customers.
b Customers prefer to stay with one bank.
c Banks provide better services now than in the past.3 According to paragraph 3, banks do not allow under-18s to a borrow money from them.
b use all of their cashpoint machines.
c manage their accounts by computer.4 Hassan says that he b worries about the security of his card.

c finds his card convenient. | <ol style="list-style-type: none">5 What would be the best title for this text?
